AUGMENTATION AND ALIGNMENT

A contact that opens to the dimension of the organizing forces

September 21 – 25, 2022
Pelago, Florence

with Kavi Gemin and Bhadrena Tschumi

Craniosacral Biodynamics practitioners cultivate an intimate relationship with Stillness, the state from which all manifestation emerges.

Stillness is not just a philosophical principle, but a practical orientation: When there is motion, there is a fulcrum of stillness around which that movement is organized.

The orientation to stillness, therefore, favors the perception of the organizing fulcrum. Consequently, the perception of the fulcrum of stillness allows an amplification, an augmentation of motion.

We thus encounter an increase in movement, a sense of constant expansion of the living body, in which the presence of the midline emerges, not as a geometric structure, but as a function of health.

The principle of midline is therefore perceived as a function of stillness. The practitioner's orientation is then aligned to the presence of midline and becomes a catalyst for stillness, for the forces of organization, for the expression of Health.

In this Advanced course for practitioners, we will explore the concept of alignment, seen as a process of continuity and unification.

We will experience what happens when a structure is aligned with the principle of stillness, returning to participate in the unity and wholeness of the whole system.

We will see alignment as a principle for facilitating the expression of primary respiration and for supporting the therapeutic process.

The more the individual is in rapport with the forces of primary respiration, the more the tempo slows down, the more we are in touch with health.

The therapeutic process becomes a profound experience of harmony and beauty.

Content

- Recognition of stillness as an organizing phenomenon
- The processes of amplification supports augmentation of primary respiration
- Structural and functional midline, the intimate relationship with stillness
- Alignment and augmentation: principles and practice
- Alignment of structures
- Alignment to the essence of the midline
- Alignment as a therapeutic process
- Supporting the relationship between inner and outer cosmos

Prerequisites: Certificate craniosacral practitioner, basic knowledge of biodynamics

Practical information

The course is taught partly in Italian and partly in English. Translation is provided.
